

On the fifth day of Christmas... These gold Roman rings from Charles Ede's Christmas catalogue are under £1,000 each
Courtesy Charles Ede

And finally

If this all feels rather mass-produced, how about delving into Charles Ede's annual Christmas catalogue, which offers small antiquities and ancient jewellery priced from around £100 to a few thousand. If you're willing to spend over £300 on a bottle of perfume then £240 for a Roman terracotta bottle, £450 for a Roman gold ring, or £380 for a 2nd-century, free-blown glass vase seems pretty reasonable in comparison.